A word to the whys

"There are those who look at things the way they are, and ask why. ... I dream of things that never were, and ask why not."

— Robert F. Kennedy, 1968 presidential campaign

Why times five

A friend who is a project manager in a large international corporation told me about a process they use frequently called "The Five Whys." The question "Why?" is asked in succession (at least five times) to work toward determining the real root of a problem or an issue.

As you persistently ask "Why?" following each answer, you can't help but dig deeper into the complexity of the challenge. Sometimes it grows bigger as you pile problem on top of problem. Sometimes it diminishes as you dissect and departmentalize. Often, the process just becomes ridiculous as things you've always believed to be true are proven to be completely indefensible!

When I first tried this strategy, I felt I'd gone back to the toddler days when all Katie or Elizabeth ever did was ask, "Why?" I recalled that their child-level questions always had a way of bringing me "back to basics." I would search for a way to explain a concept of life in a truthful way — that they could understand — without judgment one way or another. I often found myself more deeply considering not necessarily why a situation was this way or that, but why I thought it was that way!

Excellence in questions

Back in May, a dynamic group of interested, active American Angus Auxiliary members gathered at American Angus Association headquarters in Saint Joseph, Mo., for a two-day conference titled "Excellence — No Exception II." An in-depth tour of each Association department and the Angus Journal production office was followed by briefings given by key staff members. As we studied the structure of the work there, we gained new insight into the workings of the big business our Auxiliary is meant to support. We must have asked a million questions. And, it seemed every few minutes another of us expressed something like, "I had no idea there was this much involved in running a cattle breed!"

The first day, our group was able to become totally in tune with the work of the Association. From discussions of Web marketing, to demonstrations of online cattle management tools, to implementation of Certified Angus Beef® (CAB®) marketing strategies, to the current statistical incline of the breed's growth, we saw how constant change has affected the function of every department and every task at our breed headquarters. Over and over, we were shown how the work and services of our Association must be allowed to grow and evolve to meet the needs of breeders so that, together, we can meet the challenges of the beef industry.

On the second day, Auxiliary officers presented the history and framework of the major programs and activities our organization conducts: scholarships, awards, Miss American Angus and the Auxiliary-sponsored All-American CAB Cook-Off. All the participants were asked to jot down their questions and suggestions for improvement as they listened to the outlines. We recorded their input on giant Post-it® Notes and the walls of the boardroom became filled with amazing ideas from the fresh minds and varied experiences of the conference participants! This session, called "green-light thinking," really generated enthusiasm for conducting proven programs in new ways and exploring new projects we've never tried.

Back to the whys

The energy of all those ideas for new projects and new methods also brought to light some very important considerations that are sure to have much effect. Here's an example of one: To do everything we want to do in the future, it is necessary to create a new ladder of leadership — a Board of Directors to serve with and support the national officers we have historically elected.

Why? To invite, encourage and maximize the time, talents and experience of more of our members.

Why? Four regional directors and an at-large director will add a more well-rounded focus to the current officer structure.

Why? Leadership needs to be expanded, yet be able to meet on a regular basis and act efficiently with productive results.

Why? Flexible, responsive Auxiliary leadership will become better able to adapt to the changing needs of our parent association.

Why? So that the time and effort given by all volunteers — officers, directors and members — will become more effectively utilized in fulfilling our role.

Four proposals have been thoroughly researched and prepared for review by Legislative and Bylaws Chairwoman Pam Bailey and her committee:

1) formation of a board of directors, which includes the officers, four regional directors and one at-large director;

2) an update of financial sections to reflect our recent alliance with the Angus Foundation and the addition of the executive treasurer position;

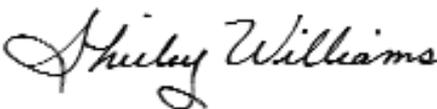

3) realignment of our fiscal year (FY) to that of our parent organization; and

4) introducing gender-neutral language throughout our bylaws so participation of men, as well as women, is welcome.

At our midyear meeting at the National Junior Angus Show (NJAS) in Denver, Colo., in July (as our procedure dictates), the proposals were presented to the members in attendance. The next step is to read the proposed changes below. They will come before the membership for a vote on Nov. 12 at the North American International Livestock Exposition (NAILE) in Louisville, Ky.

When you read and consider these four changes to our bylaws, I invite you to ask the question, "Why?" My answer is simple: To keep pace with the largest beef breed registry in the world, the Auxiliary must embrace change the way the American Angus Association has done — positively and confidently, with respect for our past, but with our actions clearly focused on today's opportunities and tomorrow's demands. I hope your next question will be, "Why not?"
